ENTERTAINMENT

THE annual conference and flower sale of the Women's School of Horticulture at Ambler will be held next Saturday, May 22, at 2 o'clock. The train leaving Philadelphia at 2:02 will be met by taxi. Supper will be served from 3 to 7, followed by dancing in the evening.

The conference on horticulture will include an address by Mr. Maurice Fuld, of New York city, on "How to Prepare a Garden." One by Mr. Frank Miles Day on "The Formal Garden," by Miss Agnes Cunningham, of Saxton, on "Market Gardening for Women," by Dr. John McFarlane, of University of Pennsylvania, on "The Future of Civic Botanic Gardens," and by Miss Myra Dock on "Women in Business."

Girls studying horticulture is an idea carried out in America only in the last three or four years. The idea and its successful result achieved in the Philadelphia women. They loved outdoor work themselves, knew the successful record of such schools in European countries and had the courage of their convictions.

After the start was made the school's growth is direct tribute to Miss Jessie T. Morgan, the managing director. She is herself an illustration of the benefit of this new training for women. She studied law at the University of Minnesota, graduating in 1901 with an LL. M. degree at the cost of her health. After a hard physical breakdown Miss Morgan turned to a career out of doors, and fortunately chose the Ambler School as having the ideal course of instruction. She built up her impaired health rapidly after a course of such executive ability while acting as an assistant to a former principal that the managers two years ago selected her to take charge of the school. In the short time she has held this position she has more than doubled the number of students, added to the school's curriculum and increased the equipment.

Under Miss Morgan's direction the present two-year course is absolutely thorough. It includes general and practical principles of horticulture, floriculture, greenhouse management and construction, fruit growing, vegetable gardening, botany, chemistry, garden zoology, entomology, study of soils, simple carpentry, market conditions, methods and book-keeping, commercial law, landscape gardening, bee keeping, poultry raising, school gardening and preserving.

Practical work is emphasized in the school grounds, 20 of which are used in the students' practice work. There are apple, cherry, pear, peach, plum trees galore; a fine vineyard of some 250 vines, and a wide variety of small fruits, with flowers and vegetables in abundance—all under the highest degree of intensive cultivation. Good-sized plots, both outdoors and in the big green houses, are the individual responsibility and delight of each student through which method there ensues most friendly rivalry.

Mrs. H. B. Fullerton, of the Long Island Experiment Station, made the interesting statement at a student conference recently that business women make ideal farmers. "The business woman, if she only knew it, is the ideal farmer," said Mrs. Fullerton, "and can beat the old-fashioned farmer at his own game any time she chooses to leave her office desk and try her fortune on the land. She is a trained thinker, she is practical, and has a capacity for details. She has no traditions to keep her stupidly planting one kind of crop when she should try another, and she will be sure to introduce economy and efficiency into her farm management. She is patient and persevering, and, above all, she loves nature. With these qualifications she can scarcely fail as a scientific farmer."

Miss Morgan also contends that the woman farmer has the advantage over any man, for she utilizes the crops after she has raised them. She illustrates the point by saying if a woman raises apples she should know what variety makes the best pies and should, moreover, know how to make them.

Two large new greenhouses were recently completed, which add largely to the facilities for practical work. One of these is used for roses and flower culture and the other for forcing vegetables under glass.

The beauty of the grounds and buildings, the commercial value of the products, the excellence of the faculty and household corps, the enthusiasm and high standard in scholarship of the students, all speak volumes for the steady faith in this new vocation for women.

"Lend Me Five Shillings," the old and renowned English play, by James Madison Morton, in which Joseph Jefferson starred years ago, will be given by the Sock and Buskin Club of the Chestnut Hill Academy in the school's gymnasium next Friday evening. The dramatic organization offers a play of some character in alternate years, and this year's production is expected to prove as successful as usual.

Professor E. G. H. teacher of English at the Academy, who has coached the students in their productions since the organization of the club several years ago, has coached the boys again this year, and under his careful guidance rehearsals are held daily, and a finished production is expected.
